Why Bali, and why now

A rental property only pays if someone rents it. In Bali, that is the easy part.

Bali received more than 15 million visitors in 2024. It has no low season in the way European destinations do: the island fills with Australians in the southern winter, with Europeans in the northern summer, and with Asian travellers through most of the year. Occupancy does not collapse in February.

The island is the world's third largest Airbnb market and ranks second among global destinations on TripAdvisor. That matters for one practical reason: distribution. You are not hoping a tenant appears. You are plugging a finished villa into platforms that already send millions of bookings to the island every year.

Uluwatu, on the Bukit peninsula in the south, is where that demand has concentrated over the last decade. Cliffs, surf breaks, beach clubs and a growing layer of restaurants, gyms and wellness studios. It is the part of Bali that commands the highest nightly rates.

02

How the investment works

No surprises. This is the whole structure, in one page.

You buy off-plan, directly from the developer

Sawana Developments designs, builds and hands over its own projects. There is no intermediary between you and the builder. Prices in this document are the developer's own prices and include the commission paid to the sales team.

Ownership is leasehold, which is how foreigners hold property in Indonesia

Foreign nationals cannot hold freehold title in Indonesia. The standard instrument is a leasehold: a registered, transferable right to use the land for a fixed term. Luma and Luma II are sold on 25 years plus a 25 year extension. Horizon and Laguna run to 28 March 2050 with an option to extend for 30 years at market price. Every project sits in a Yellow Zone with Pondok Wisata licensing, which is the zoning that permits short term rental.

You pay in stages, as the building goes up

A 40 percent deposit reserves the unit. The remainder is tied to construction milestones, so your money follows the concrete rather than preceding it.

The villa arrives finished, not empty

Fully furnished and styled, with kitchen appliances, linens and decor. Private parking. You receive a villa that can take its first booking the week it is handed over, not a shell that needs another 40,000 spent on it.

Management is optional, and it is already priced in Sawana offers full villa management: guests, cleaning, maintenance, platforms. The projections in this document already subtract that fee. If you choose to manage the villa yourself, your net result is higher than what you see here.

PAYMENT SCHEDULE

40%	20%	20%	10%	5%	5%
On reservation	At 25% of construction	At 50%	At 75%	At 90%	On handover

03

The numbers, in full

Below is the exact model Sawana uses, with every deduction visible. We would rather show you the arithmetic than a headline.

Revenue is the nightly rate multiplied by occupancy. From that, four costs come out before anything reaches you:

Operating expenses	10%	Cleaning, utilities, pool, garden, consumables
Full service management	15%	Guests, bookings, maintenance, reporting
Booking platform fees	15%	Airbnb, Booking.com and direct channels
PB1 government tax	10%	Indonesian tax on accommodation revenue

Half of gross revenue is spent before you see a cent. The figures in this document are what is left after all four.

We publish three occupancy scenarios rather than one. 75 percent is the middle case and the one we consider realistic for a managed villa in Uluwatu. 65 percent is a bad year. 85 percent is a good one.

> Sawana has not yet issued a rental projection for Laguna Villas. We will send it as soon as it is published rather than estimate one here.

These are projections built on market assumptions, not guaranteed returns. Actual results depend on occupancy, nightly rates, operating costs and the exchange rate on the day. Sawana also estimates a 20 to 30 percent increase in value between purchase and handover; that is an estimate too, and it is not included in the return figures above.

What happens next

1 We talk

A call in Polish, 20 to 30 minutes. You tell us the budget and what you want the villa to do. We tell you which units fit and which do not.

2 You get the full file

Floor plans, technical specifications, the land documents, the material list and the rental projection for the specific unit.

3 You reserve

A reservation agreement and the 40 percent deposit hold the unit. From there the schedule follows construction.

4 We stay in touch

Progress reports through the build. At handover you decide whether Sawana manages the villa or you do.

The next step is a conversation, not a signature.
